Let today's master copywriter show you how to take your online copywriting to the next level of effectiveness, success, and profitable results!

Robert W. Bly is an award-winning copywriter and consultant whose clients include IBM, AT&T, BOC Group, and other multinational organizations. One of the top copywriting experts in the world, Bly is the author of nearly fifty successful business and marketing books, including The Copywriter's Handbook, Internet Direct Mail, and Business-to-Business Direct Marketing. He is a winner of the Direct Marketing Association's Gold Echo Award, the Web Marketing Association's Standard of Excellence Award, and numerous other honors and awards.

Bob Bly has done it again. He has made his case about the importance of copy (i.e. content)--but in the total scheme of the online universe. While many online marketers depend on flashy graphics or the latest "bleeding edge" technology to attract customers, Bly rightfully asks "What does your site have to keep them there?" He argues that it is selling copy that keeps the reader at your site instead of wondering elsewhere. And he backs up his arguments in a solid manner. Bly covers the basics of persuasive online copy but more importantly, he analyzes the differences between print copy and online copy. Knowing these differences will enable one to effectively craft copy for the online world without making some of the usual mistakes that web site content providers make. Like all of his titles, the book is lucid, filled with examples and anecdotes, and of course, contains information on how to adapt your hard-working copy to the online environment. If you're a marketer, copywriter, or just someone who's interested in the subject, this is the book to buy. Highly recommended.

An essential read for any copywriter writing for the Web.
