Customer Reviews

Grade 3-4-Readers will be immediately engaged with the first lines of this account of the raising of the Hunley on August 8, 2000, and are told that a mystery is about to be solved. Then, step-by-step they are taken back in time to a short discussion of the Civil War, the role of naval blockades, and the dream of James McClintock and Baxter Watson to create an underwater battleship to keep the Southern ports free of Northern ships. The idea did not come quickly to fruition and all of the many difficulties and disappointments are included. The chapters are short but packed with information and, while this is part of an early reading series, there is no sense that the information is simplified. The illustrations, while not compelling, do highlight the drama of the story, showing men swimming away from a sinking ship, fires raging across the decks. This little piece of history is well presented. Edith Ching, St. Albans School, Mt. St. Alban, Washington, DC Copyright 2003 Reed

Kate Jerome began her career as a high school biology teacher, but from her work developing curricula, she transitioned to book writing and publishing, authoring more than 70 books.

I bought this for a former student who visits my class regularly. He is very interested in the Civil War. I hope that more American History will be taught in all public schools rather than the mind-numbing test drills .

My 9 year old loved this story!

Good summary of Hunley history.

great book to read

Grandson enjoyed reading this book.

Good book

I got this book for my cousin, she is a big civil war buff. She left me know that she is really enjoying her book. I am very pleased with the fast service on delivering this item.

Perfect for my nephew.
