Kindergarten-Grade 3 A boy ends up minding his younger brother when their grandmother falls asleep on the couch. While he is running the show, Will gives readers lessons on what a sitter should never do. According to him, lesson number one is: don't forget about your charge. The havoc wreaked by one preschooler is humorously exaggerated. The bright and colorful illustrations and the wonderful facial expressions will make readers laugh even without reading the text. It is a bit unrealistic that the grandmother never wakes up to realize what is going on with all the noise the brothers are making, but the story is all in good fun and not to be taken too seriously. Overall, this is an accessible choice for newly independent chapter book readers. Lisa S. Schindler, Children's Librarian, Bethpage Public Library, NY Copyright © Reed Business Information, a

I purchased this as a gift for my niece and she loves it!!! :)

LOVE this book for our 6 year old about to enter first grade. She is reading pretty well already and the pictures make any unknown words much easier to sound and understand. The theme is as hilarious as the title and picture suggests and with a little sister, our reader simply adored this book. Now want to look for others by this author. Did I mention the GREAT illustrations? Win Win Win

Interesting little story.

Christmas Gift

hilarious & fun read for my 7 year old

My older son loves this book because he thinks it is so relatable. He knows how it feels to have a little brother who gets into things! This is a great book for older siblings! It will also help with fluency for 7-8 year olds.

Put on the bookshelf for the grandkids to read.

I would recommend it to any parent.
