Customer Reviews

"Buechler's volume stands out for its comprehensive, balanced, and unbiased presentations. Excellent for students, the book, with its historical and macro perspective, is also a valuable tool for researched looking for the big picture...Highly recommended." --CHOICE March 2012 "I was well-rewarded as a reader of this book by the thoroughness of the coverage and the good historical perspective that put developments in context. This book should work well in upper division undergraduate classes, and will be a good starting point for those building prelim reading lists." --Rhys H. Williams, Loyola University Chicago, in Mobilization: An International Quarterly

Steven M. Buechler is Professor of Sociology at Minnesota State University, Mankato. His recent books include the critically acclaimed Understanding Social Movements: Theories from the Classical Era to the Present (Paradigm 2011).

The book is important and relevant in the field of social movements because it provides classical sociologists' theories (although in brief) in one place for comparison.

This is an excellent overview of social scientific theories of how and why social movements occur and what their characteristic dynamics are. Buechler does an excellent job of rooting competing currents in contemporary social movement theory in longer-running divisions within the social sciences and giving greater attention to relevant earlier work that many contemporary scholars ignore. After laying these foundations he gives a straightforward but thorough account of the development of social movement theory from early theories of Collective Behavior, through the rise of the Resource Mobilization/Political Process school to the present, paying attention to dissenting currents all along the way. All that is missing is a chapter on Buechler's own important (if underappreciated) contribution to this literature, "Social Movements in Advanced Capitalism: The Political Economy and Cultural Construction of Social Activism" and another on the recent emergence of an explicitly Marxist body of social movement theory represented by Cox and Nilsen's "We Make Our Own History." (The last is an unfair criticism of course since that work has appeared almost entirely since the publication of "Understanding Social Movements.")
