

The book was found

Love Comes Along: The Best Mistake, Local Hero

Synopsis

From #1 New York Times bestselling author Nora Roberts come two classic tales about finding the man of your dreams right under your nose.

The Best Mistake Ex-model Zoe Fleming is now a hardworking single mom and she wouldn't have it any other way. Though she would like a tenant to share household expenses. What she gets is confirmed bachelor J. Cooper McKinnon. Coop quickly befriends her son and in no time has the reluctant Zoe charmed, too. But she has zero room in her life for a man! Either this was a recipe for disaster or the best mistake she's ever made.

Local Hero Hester Wallace is proud of her independence. She needs only one man in her life her nine-year-old son, Radley. But when Rad starts idolizing their neighbor Mitch Dempsey, Hester wonders if her son needs a male role model. Hester would do anything for her boy, but inviting Mitch into their lives is dangerous. She might start to rely on Mitch or worse, fall in love with him.

Book Information

Audio CD

Publisher: Brilliance Audio; Unabridged edition (April 29, 2014)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 1480590703

ISBN-13: 978-1480590700

Product Dimensions: 5 x 0.8 x 5.5 inches

Shipping Weight: 6.4 ounces (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 4.2 out of 5 stars 11 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #1,322,831 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #90 in Books > Books on CD >

Authors, A-Z > (R) > Roberts, Nora #784 in Books > Books on CD > Romance #2363

in Books > Books on CD > Literature & Fiction > Unabridged

Customer Reviews

Nora Roberts is the #1 New York Times bestselling author of more than 200 novels. She is also the author of the bestselling In Death series written under the pen name J. D. Robb. There are more than 400 million copies of her books in print.

MacLeod Andrews is an actor, voice actor, and audiobook narrator. He has narrated dozens of audiobooks, earning eight AudioFile Earphones Awards and placing as a finalist for the prestigious Audie Award for best narration in 2010, 2011, 2013, 2014, and 2015. He is a company member of Rising Phoenix Repertory in Los Angeles.

No one answered the door. Coop glanced at the scrawled note in his hand to make sure he had the right address. It checked out, and since the tidy two-story Tudor in the neat, tree-lined neighborhood was precisely what he was after, he knocked again. Loudly. There was a car in the drive, an aging station wagon that could use a good wash and a little bodywork. Somebody was in there, he thought, scowling up at the second-floor window, where music pumped out-highvolume rock with a thumping backbeat. He stuffed the note and his hands in his pockets and took a moment to survey the surroundings. The house was trim, set nicely off the road behind clipped bayberry hedges. The flower garden, in which spring blossoms were beginning to thrive, was both colorful and just wild enough not to look static. Not that he was a big flower lover, but there was something to be said for ambience. There was a shiny red tricycle beside the driveway, and that made him a little uneasy. He wasn't particularly fond of kids. Not that he disliked them. It was just that they always seemed a kind of foreign entity to him, like aliens from an outlying planet: they spoke a different language, had a different culture. And, well, they were short, and usually sticky. Still, the ad had talked of quiet, privacy, and a convenient distance from Baltimore. That was exactly what he was looking for. He knocked again, only to have a thundering wave of music wash out the window over him. The rock didn't bother him. At least he understood it. But he wasn't a man to kick his heels outside a closed door for long, so he tried the knob. When it turned, he pushed the door open and walked in. In an old habit, he pushed back the dark hair that fell over his forehead and scanned the none-too-neat living room he'd entered. There was a lot of clutter, and he, a bachelor who'd spent a great deal of his thirty-two years living alone, wondered over it. He wasn't fussy or obsessive, he often told himself. It was simply that everything had a place, and it was easier to find if it had been put there. Obviously his prospective landlord didn't agree. There were toys that went along with the tricycle outside, piles of magazines and newspapers, a pint-size fielder's cap that declared for the O's. At least the kid had taste, Coop decided, and moved on. There was a small powder room done in an amazing combination of purple and green, and a den that had been converted into a makeshift office. File drawers were open, papers spilling out. In the kitchen dishes waited in the sink to be washed, and lurid drawings, created by a child with a wild imagination, decorated the front of the refrigerator. Maybe, he thought, it was just as well no one had answered the door. He considered backtracking and wandering upstairs. As long as he was here, it made sense to check the rest of the place out. Instead, he stepped outside to get the lay of the land. He spotted open wooden steps leading to a short deck. The private entrance the ad had mentioned, he mused, and climbed. The glass door was open, and the music rolling through it was overwhelming. He caught the smell of fresh paint, one he'd always enjoyed, and stepped inside. The open area combined kitchen and living space cleverly enough. The appliances weren't new, but they were gleaming. The tile floor had been scrubbed recently enough for him to identify pine cleaner beneath the scent of paint. Feeling more hopeful, he followed the music, snooping a bit as he went. The bathroom was as scrupulously clean as the kitchen, and, fortunately, a plain glossy white. Beside the sink was a book on home repair, open to the plumbing section. Wary, Coop turned on the tap. When the water flowed out fast and clear, he nodded, satisfied. A small room with definite office potential and a nice view of the yard was across the hall. The ad had claimed two bedrooms. The music led him to it, a fair-sized room that fronted the house, with space enough for his California king. The floor, which seemed to be a random-width oak in good condition, was covered with splattered drop cloths. There were paint cans, trays, brushes, extra rollers. A laborer in baggy overalls and bare feet completed the picture. Despite the hair-concealing cap and oversize denim, Coop recognized a woman when he saw one. She was tall, and the bare feet on the stepladder were long and narrow and decorated with paint splashes and hot-pink toenails. She sang, badly, along with the music. Coop rapped on the doorjamb. "Excuse me." She went on painting, her hips moving rhythmically as she started on the ceiling border. Stepping across the drop cloths, Coop tapped her on the back. She screamed, jumped and turned all at once. Though he was quick on his feet, he wasn't fast enough to avoid the slap of the paintbrush across his cheek. He swore and jerked backward, then forward again to catch her before she tumbled off the ladder. He had a quick, and not unpleasant, impression of a slim body, a pale, triangular face dominated by huge, long-lashed brown eyes, and the scent of honeysuckle. Then he was grunting and stumbling backward, clutching the stomach her elbow had jammed into. She yelled something while he fought to get his breath back. "Are you crazy?" he managed, then shot up a hand as she hefted a can, slopping paint over the sides as she prepared to use it as a weapon. "Lady, if you throw that at me, I'm going to have to hurt you." "What?" she shouted. "I said, don't throw that. I'm here about the ad." "What?" she shouted again. Her eyes were still wide and full of panic, and she looked capable of anything. "The ad, damn it." Still rubbing his stomach, Coop marched to the portable stereo and shut it off. "I'm here about the ad," he repeated, his voice loud in the sudden silence. The big brown eyes narrowed with suspicion. "What ad?" "The apartment." He swiped a hand over his cheek, studied the smear of white on it, and swore again. "The apartment." "Really?" She kept her eyes glued to his. He looked tough, she thought. Like a brawler with those broad shoulders, lean athletic build and long legs. His eyes, a light, almost translucent green, looked anything but friendly, and the faded Baltimore Orioles T-shirt and battered jeans didn't contribute any sense of respectability. She figured she could outrun him, and she could certainly outscreech him. "The ad doesn't start to run until tomorrow." "Tomorrow?"

Nonplussed, he reached into his pocket for his scribbled note. "This is the right address. The ad was for this place." She stood her ground. "It doesn't run until tomorrow, so I don't see how you could know about it." "I work at the paper." Moving cautiously, he held out the note. "Since I've been looking for a place, I asked one of the girls in Classifieds to keep an eye out." He glanced down at his note again. "Two-bedroom apartment on second floor, private entrance, quiet neighborhood convenient for commuters." She only continued to frown at him. "That's right." Realizing his inside track wasn't strictly ethical, he winced. "Look, I guess she got a little overenthusiastic. I gave her a couple of tickets to a game, and she must've figured she'd do me a favor and pass the information along a little early." When he saw that her grip on the can had relaxed, he tried a smile. "I knocked, then I came around back." Probably best not to mention he'd wandered through the house first. "The ad didn't run the address." "I work at the paper," he repeated. He was taking a good look at her now. There was something vaguely familiar about her face. And what a face it was. All slashing cheekbones and liquid eyes, that creamy porcelain skin women's face cream ads always raved about. Her mouth was wide, with an alluringly full lower lip. At the moment, the face continued to frown. "They had the address for billing," he continued. "Since I had a couple of hours, I thought I'd come by and check it out. Look, I can come back tomorrow, if you'd feel more comfortable. But I'm here now." He shrugged. "I can show you my press pass." He pulled it out for her, and was pleased when she narrowed her eyes to study it. "I do a column. J. Cooper McKinnon on sports. 'All in the Game'?" "Oh." It meant nothing to her. The sports page wasn't her choice of reading material. But the smile had appeased her. He didn't look so much like a thug when he smiled. And the smear of paint decorating the lean, tanned face added just enough comedy to soothe her. "I guess it's all right, then. I wasn't expecting to show the apartment for a couple of days yet. It's not ready." She held up the can, set it down again. "I'm still painting." "I noticed." She laughed at that. It was a full-throated, smoky sound that went with the natural huskiness of her voice. "Guess you did. I'm Zoe Fleming." She crouched down to dampen a rag with paint remover. "Thanks." He rubbed the rag over his cheek. "The ad said immediate occupancy." "Well, I figured I'd be finished in here by tomorrow, when the ad was scheduled to run. Are you from the area?" "I've got a place downtown. I'm looking for something with a little more space, a little more atmosphere." "This is a pretty good-sized apartment. It was converted about eight years ago. The guy who owned it had it done for his son, and when he died, the son sold it and moved to California. He wanted to write sitcoms." Coop walked over to check out the view. He moved fluidly, Zoe thought, like a man who knew how to stay light and ready on his feet.

She'd had the impression of wiry strength when her body tumbled into his. And good strong hands. Quick ones, too. She pursed her lips. It might be handy to have a man around. "Is it just you, Mr. McKinnon?" She thought wistfully how nice it would be if he had a family-another child for Keenan to play with. "Just me." The place felt right, he decided. It would be good to get out of a box that was just one more box in a building of boxes, to smell grass now and then. Barbecue smoke. "I can move in over the weekend." She hadn't thought it would be so easy, and she nibbled her lip as she thought it through. She'd never been a landlady before, but she'd been a tenant, and she figured she knew the ropes. "I'll need first and last months' rent." "Yeah." "And, ah, references." "I'll give you the number of the management company that handles my building. You can call Personnel at the paper. Have you got a lease for me to sign?" She didn't. She'd checked out a book from the library, and she'd meant to type up a scaled-down copy of a lease from it the next morning. "I'll have it tomorrow. Don't you want to look at the rest of the apartment, ask any questions?" She'd been practicing her landlady routine for days. "I've seen it. It's fine." "Well." That deflated her a bit. "I guess I can cancel the ad." There was a sound like a herd of rampaging elephants. Zoe glanced toward the open door and crouched to intercept the missile that hurtled through. It was a boy, Coop saw when she scooped the child up. He had glossy golden hair, red sneakers, and jeans that were streaked with some unidentifiable substance that looked like it would easily transfer to other surfaces. He carried a plastic lunch box with a picture of some apocalyptic space battle on it, and a sheet of drawing paper that was grimy at the edges. "I drew the ocean," he announced. "And a million people got ate by sharks." "Gruesome." Zoe shuddered obligingly before accepting his sloppy kiss. She set him down to admire the drawing. "These are really big sharks," she said, cagily distinguishing the shark blobs from the people blobs. "They're monster sharks. Mutant monster sharks. They have teeth." "So I see. Keenan, this is Mr. McKinnon. Our new tenant." Keenan wrapped one arm around Zoe's leg for security as he eyed the stranger. His eyes were working their way up to Coop's face when they lit on the T-shirt. "That's baseball. I'm gonna learn. Mama's getting a book so she can teach me." A book. Coop barely checked a snort. As if you could learn the greatest game invented by Man from a book. What kind of nerd did the kid have for a father? "Great." It was all Coop intended to say. He'd always thought it wise to avoid entangling himself in a conversation with anyone under sixteen. Keenan had other ideas. "If you're going to live here, you have to pay rent. Then we can pay the mortgage and stuff and go to Disney World." "What was the kid? An accountant?" "Okay, old man." Zoe laughed and ruffled his hair. "I can handle it from here. Go on down and put your stuff away." "Is Beth coming to play with me tonight?" "Yes, Beth's coming. Now scoot. I'll be down in a minute." "Kay."

He made a dash for the door, stopping when his mother called him. It only took one look, the raised brow for him to remember. He looked back at Coop, flashed a quick, sunny grin. "Bye, mister." The herd of elephants rampaged again, then there was the crash of a door slamming. "He makes an entrance," Zoe said as she turned back to Coop. "The dramatic flair comes from my mother. She's an actress, off-off-Broadway." Tilting her head, Zoe rested one bare foot on the bottom rung of the stepladder. "You look like you're ready to change your mind. You have a problem with children?" "No." The kid might have thrown him off, but Coop doubted it would be a problem. The boy would hardly be beating a path to his door. And if he did, Coop thought, he could send him off again quickly enough. "No, he's, ah, cute." "Yes, he is. I won't claim he's an angel, but he won't make a nuisance of himself. If he gives you any trouble, just let me know." "Sure. Look, I'll come by tomorrow to sign the lease and give you a check. I'll pick up the keys then." "That'll be fine." "Any special time good for you?" She looked blank for a moment. "What's tomorrow?" "Friday." "Friday." She closed her eyes and flipped through her messy internal calendar. "I'm working between ten and two. I think." She opened her eyes again, smiled. "Yeah, I'm pretty sure. Anytime after two-thirty?" "Fine. Nice meeting you, Mrs. Fleming." She took his offered hand. "It's Miss," she said easily. "I'm not married. And since we'll be living together, so to speak, you can make it Zoe." --This text refers to the Mass Market Paperback edition.

This double-story book gives the single mother hope for a future with a man who comes in the door when you are least expecting it. It also shows how women try to take a strong stand to fight what others may say is the "easy" way -- let a man in your life. Both different stories warmed my heart with simple hopefulness. Thank you Nora for letting us know that Love Comes Along...just when you looking in the other direction.

Excellent as expected

loved it

Excellent

I am an avid NORA ROBERTS fan. As usual, this was most enjoyable and a wonderful escape.

Great book. Seller was very efficient. Thanks!

This book has two stories. Good to take on a trip.

love it

Download to continue reading...

Love Comes Along: The Best Mistake, Local Hero First Comes Love (First Comes Love Series Book 1) DC Super Hero Girls: Past Times at Super Hero High (DC Super Hero Girls Graphic Novels) First Comes Love, then Comes Malaria: How a Peace Corps Poster Boy Won My Heart and a Third World Adventure Changed My Life Your Story Hour Bible Comes Alive Series (Bible Comes Alive, 1) Ultimate Bass Play-Along Rush: Play Along with 6 Great Demonstration Tracks (Authentic Bass TAB), Book & CD (Ultimate Play-Along) Ultimate Guitar Play-Along Led Zeppelin, Vol 1: Play Along with 8 Great-Sounding Tracks (Authentic Guitar TAB), Book & 2 CDs (Ultimate Play-Along) Ultimate Easy Guitar Play-Along -- The Doors: Eight Songs with Full TAB, Play-Along Tracks, and Lesson Videos (Easy Guitar TAB), Book & DVD (Ultimate Easy Play-Along) Along Interstate-75, 19th edition: The "must have" guide for your drive to and from Florida (Along Interstate 75: The Local Knowledge Driving Guide for I) Along Interstate-75: Local Knowledge, Entertainment And Insider Tips, for Your Drive Between Detroit And the Florida Border. (Along Interstate 75) Dating and the Single Parent: * Are You Ready to Date? * Talking With the Kids * Avoiding a Big Mistake * Finding Lasting Love BUENOS AIRES Travel Guide. What To Know Before You Go: The uncommon guidebook and insider tips for Buenos Aires, Argentina. Know Like a Local. Go Like a Local. Live Like a Local. The Local Sydney Tour Guide: See Sydney From The Best Cafes To The Best Habourside Attractions (The Local Tour Guides Book 1) Here Comes Exterminator!: The Longshot Horse, the Great War, and the Making of an American Hero Aloha: Love, Suite Love/Fixed by Love/Game of Love/It All Adds Up to Love (Inspirational Romance Collection) KIDS LOVE I-75, 2nd Edition: Your Family Travel Guide to Exploring the Best Kid-Tested Places along I-75. 400 Fun Stops & Unique Spots from Michigan to Miami (Kids Love Travel Guides) Be Free or Die: The Amazing Story of Robert Smalls' Escape from Slavery to Union Hero: The Amazing Story of Robert Smalls' Escape from Slavery to Union Hero Marvel Super Heroes Coloring Book: Super hero, Hero, book, Wolverine, Avengers, Guardians of the Galaxy, X-men, Defenders, Illuminati, Fantastic Four, ... Human Torch, Comic, Captain America, Groot, DC Super Hero Girls: Finals Crisis (DC Super Hero Girls Graphic Novels) Wonder Woman at Super Hero High (DC Super Hero Girls)

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help