Map: Exploring The World

Synopsis

300 stunning maps from all periods and from all around the world, exploring and revealing what maps tell us about history and ourselves. Map: Exploring the World brings together more than 300 fascinating maps from the birth of cartography to cutting-edge digital maps of the twenty-first century. The book's unique arrangement, with the maps organized in complimentary or contrasting pairs, reveals how the history of our attempts to make flat representations of the world has been full of beauty, ingenuity and innovation. Selected by an international panel of curators, academics and collectors, the maps reflect the many reasons people make maps, such as to find their way, to assert ownership, to record human activity, to establish control, to encourage settlement, to plan military campaigns or to show political power. The selection includes the greatest names in cartography, such as James Cook, Gerard Mercator, Matthew Fontaine Maury and Phyllis Pearsall, as well as maps from indigenous cultures around the world, rarely seen maps from lesser-known cartographers, and maps of outstanding beauty and surprising individuality from the current generation of map makers.

This book was created by the editors at Phaidon. Phaidon is the premier global publisher of the creative arts with over 1,500 titles in print. We work with the world's most influential artists, chefs, writers and thinkers to produce innovative books on art, photography, design, architecture, fashion, food and travel, and illustrated books for children. Phaidon is headquartered in London and New York City.

I was quite disappointed. The maps are not only so much reduced as to be mostly illegible, but the reproductions are mediocre, using a relatively coarse half-tone screen and less than vibrant colors.

Why reviewers have not noted these limitations is a mystery. Phaidon could and should have done much better -- especially given the Introduction's claim that "this book puts the emphasis back on the experience of viewing rather than of describing. The accompanying photo shows an enlargement of a typical square inch of a reproduction. Compare, e.g., MoMA's The Printed Picture by Richard Benson (2008), whose illustrations are superbly reproduced (even viewed with a powerful loupe the screen is so fine as to be virtually undetectable) and with thumbnail enlargements of small sections in the case of reproductions that had to be much reduced.

I'm a map freak - love maps. That said, this book was a complete disappointment. The maps are printed so small that you cannot read them without a magnifying glass AND in bright light. I do not expect to pay this for a book and have these problems with it. If I could leave no stars, I would. Don't waste your money on this one - totally not worth it.

A gift for an adult son who has always loved maps. He keeps it on his coffee table to pick up and look at whenever. The organization of the maps contrasting old and new is unique and most interesting.

The organization and comparisons of maps of the ancient, old and new and of many cultures make for hours of pleasure.

From an NPR review, I greatly enjoyed this book. While it is not a scholarly treatment of cartography, it IS a "coffee table" grade overview of a galaxy of ways to deliver information.

This book was informative and beautiful. Bought as a gift for someone who loves maps (in fact, she was a cartographer) and she loved it!

The book makes a nice gift for several of our brainer grandchildren. Send along a magnifying glass or it is a waste..

It was a gift for my wife - she says it's a very cool book. I heard about it on NPR, and for those who like the process of map-making, not just the use of them, it's a fascinating book.
